the urban south. A widely published scholar, her recent books include Condition or Process: Researching Race in Education, Critical Race Theory and Education: All God's Children Got a Song, Handbook of Critical Race Theory and Education, and Resegregation of Schools: Education and Race in the 21st Century.

PANEL LEADER

Dr. Paul Miller

Principal and CEO, Green Tech High Charter School

Dr. Miller is an expert in urban education who specializes in school reform and redesign, counseling school officials and administrators on effective strategies to increase student performance and establish a culture of success.

Paul has committed his life to educating and empowering low-income, urban youth with the hope of creating change and undoing the trend of underachievement that plagues inner-city, minority males. His greatest pride is in students who wake up to become productive, and then choose to help others become productive as well.

Nadine Groenig

Chief Executive Officer, Southwestern Institute for the Education of Native Americans

Ms. Groenig develops programs for school boards, district and school staff, Indian Education Committees, and Native American families. The goal is to find better ways to reach indigenous students and engage families in order to empower both. The Institute collaborates with organizations serving Native Americans in education, health, culture, and civic engagement. Previously, Nadine served as Director of Indian Education for the AZ Dept. of Education. She is member of the Pueblo of Laguna in NM.
